Something exceptional must have happened, says everybody, that Purdue should have refused to play out the remaining few minutes of the game after Rucker had made a claimed touchdown in the second half. The Purdue version of that, and given with much emphasis, is that an Indiana spectator ran on to the field and tripped McCann just as he was in the act of tackling the man making for the goal. Referee Jackson is said to have seen the interference and reported to Umpire Rider, but the latter ignored | skylight, and, after arming themselves, the rules and allowed the play. Coaches Balliet and Jamison, as well as the entire team, insist that the play was the grossest in refusing to continue the game. The protest filed will be carried to the board of arbitration of the Big Nine, and there is confidence that the game will be declared either a tie or be thrown out altogether. As for the play of Purdue, the coaches cidedly the better of it in the second half, but it was constantly required to protest against I. U. people crowding on to the field.
